 - a. The program and its staff shall comply with all Virginia Department of Education (VDOE) regulations, laws and policies covering alternative educational programs and special educational programs for children with disabilities.
 - b. Educational services shall be designed so that each student with a disability receives services following initial enrollment. The hours and length of services shall be based on the student's behavior, both in and out of the program, and incorporated in the IEP.
6. HCPS shall provide the Successful Offeror(s), upon referral, current student files.

7. All components of the services to be received shall be reviewed and approved by a liaison from HCPS Exceptional Education department. These components include, but are not limited to the students' Individualized Education Program (IEP), behavior management plan, intervention policies, educational program and service delivery and documentation of services.

B. Specific Requirements

The Successful Offeror(s) shall:

1. Provide case management services while students are enrolled in the program to include contact and coordination of services with the liaison from the Exceptional Education department of HCPS. Case management shall include all reporting procedures required by HCPS, including completion of 4 ½ week interims if required, nine-week updates of IEP's and end-of-the-year reports. Student assessments shall be conducted as directed by the Exceptional Education department of HCPS. Case management shall also include quarterly communication of progress, observations, evaluation summary and any other matters regarding the enrollee's scholastic status to the parents and the liaison;
2. Provide crisis intervention services as needed to the students and families while the student is in attendance at the program or is receiving services;
3. Support development and implementation of behavior management with specific expectations as determined by HCPS, school, and individual student plan;
4. Report any serious incidents, as defined by the HCPS Code of Student Conduct, to the on-site Principal or designee;

Rating Scale Results

	No Apparent Problem	Degree of Disability
		Mild	Moderate	Severe
Articulation		X	to	X
Language	X
Voice	X
Fluency	X

Summary: X a four year, one month old boy was referred to the preschool intake team by his grandmother due to concerns about his communication skill development. He presented as a friendly little boy who was cooperative and compliant throughout the evaluation session. X demonstrated appropriate attention to various activities presented and was a willing participant in all activities. He freely and verbally communicated with this examiner in a socially appropriate manner and easily used his words, phrases, and sentences to relate information and initiate and sustain communicative interactions. It was noted however that X's connected speech could be difficult to understand and often this was dependent on the contextual cues available. Based on today's observations, assessment results, and parent report X exhibited typically developing language skills and a mild to moderate articulation impairment.

Consideration of these results in conjunction with other assessment results

Areas of Evaluation

Background Information (Pertinent medical, social, developmental or educational history)

X has been in the care of his grandparents, who have custody, since October, and since X was approximately eight months of age. Much of his prenatal and birth history is unknown however it was reported that he was exposed to illicit substances in utero. It was also reported that he experienced some respiratory difficulties upon first entering their care however this resolved and he is no longer classified as asthmatic. No other major surgeries, illnesses, or hospitalizations were reported. X generally met early developmental milestones within expectations and has not had any feeding difficulties. His sleep patterns have also continued to improve.

X's family reported that they generally understand his speech however unfamiliar listeners may have more difficulty. He has begun to demonstrate more frustration when not understood in the home, but can be easily redirected. His family has done their own research into the typical articulation norms, and has been attempting to work with him on sound production skills in the home. It was reported that X's articulation skills initially became a bit concerning around the age of two when it was observed that he was not speaking like his older brother.

X currently attends the Church preschool program three days per week. His classroom teacher completed a report of development and in the area of communication it was reported that X is understood about 75% of the time, with contextual cues. When not understood he will repeat himself several times before getting frustrated. He makes appropriate eye contact, follows directions well, and uses his words to communicate his wants and needs in utterances of appropriate length. He does not exhibit dysfluencies and communicates his thoughts in an organized manner although he may speak loudly inside. His peers do not seem to notice his speech difference and he reportedly plays well and interactively with his classmates. He was described as compassionate and understanding, but can seem discouraged when not understood. His adult interactions were also described as appropriate and he appears eager to please and enjoys being praised for accomplishments. X will seek out adult help to resolve conflicts and seems to be aware of boundaries although he may not always be cautious. He is also independent in toileting and feeding at school. X's gross and fine motor skills were all described as age-appropriate and he reportedly moves confidently through his environment. He appears to retain information that is taught and participates in activities however his attention deteriorates as the group gets bigger. X is also able to match and sort by color, shape, and size and recognize and name colors. "X is a smart and adaptable kid. He plays well with others both parallel and group play. Right now it doesn't seem to impact his ability to get along with classmates. Going forward I fear that the distance between their patience and his ability to communicate will get wider and will start to become an issue. Many times I have to use context clues to understand what X is trying to explain or tell me about. He does also exhibit some inability to focus for set periods of time or keep his body still for things like circle time or music class. He is easy redirected into another chair/position."

Pure Tone Hearing Screening

It is unknown whether X passed his newborn hearing screening. His hearing was initially evaluated by VA ENT on 10/30/15 however due to increased middle ear pressure it was felt that he may have had an ear infection and was referred to his pediatrician for examination. His hearing was re-tested on 11/09/15 and indicated normal hearing. Camden's hearing was also evaluated by the Richmond Public Schools audiologist on 03/16/16 and indicated hearing within the normal range bilaterally.

Oral Peripheral Examination

Oral structures are:	Satisfactory	Unsatisfactory
	In need of further examination by	ENT Physician Dentist

Upon informal assessment there were no overt structural abnormalities noted that would appear to inhibit speech production abilities. X's overall oral strength and range of motion was judged to be grossly within normal limits.

Age: 4:1

Date:

Results: This test was administered to assess production of consonants in the initial, medial, and final positions of single words. X achieved a standard score of 81 and a percentile rank of 12 indicating a mild delay based on the total number of errors exhibited. While it is important to note that some of X's sound errors continue to be within developmental expectations there were various sound errors that were a bit atypical. X also exhibited several phonological processes, or simplification patterns, including fronting of velars, gliding of liquids, and cluster reduction. It was also noted that X was not easily stimulable for the correct production of several developmentally appropriate and expected sounds. There were periods in which X's speech was understood however there were also times that his connected speech was difficult to decipher and heavily dependent on the contextual cues available. His conversational speech was judged to be approximately 75% understandable to this examiner as a new listener. While his teachers had reported that there is a noticeable difference and that his speech does not seem to be holding him back now, Mrs. X reported that he has begun to evidence more frustration at school and at home and will now stomp his feet and walk away seemingly more aware of his speech difficulty. At this time there does appear to be at least a mild to moderate articulation impairment that could be adversely impacting his ability to effectively relate information to others across a variety of contexts. Please see the next page for a description and examples of the phonological processes mentioned above.

Test Scores

On this instrument standard scores of 100 are considered to be the mean with a standard deviation of 15, meaning standard scores of 85 and above are considered to be within normal limits. The confidence interval indicates that there is a 95% chance that the standard score would have been within that range if tested again. Percentile ranks indicate the percentage of children in the standardization sample who earned a particular score or lower on the test. Age-equivalents indicate the typical age of the norm group that obtained a similar score.

	Standard Score	Confidence Interval	Percentile rank	Age-Equivalent
Auditory Comprehension	116	108-122	86	5 yrs.
Expressive Communication	94	88-101	34	4 yrs.
Total Language Score	105	99-111	63	4 yrs. 5 mo.

Discussion

Auditory Comprehension: X received credit for multiple test items presented both at and above his age level including demonstrating an understanding of complex sentences, quantitative concepts, sentences with modified nouns, and for identifying advanced body parts, for recalling story detail, identifying story sequence, making inferences, identifying items that did not belong, and understanding false beliefs. He did not have difficulty with any test items presented through the five year, eleven month age range.

Expressive Communication: X again received credit for multiple test items presented both at and above his age level including answering questions logically, using possessives, describing object functions, answering questions about hypothetical events, using prepositions and possessive pronouns, and naming categories. He did not have difficulty with any test items presented through the five year, five month age range.
